

Noah's descendants (1:4b-23)

Noah's sons (1:4b)

1:4. Shem, Ham and Japheth.

An unusual feature in verse 4 is the way Noah's sons are introduced. They are named in straight succession one after the other in exactly the same way as all the other names from Adam to Noah. It is as if Japheth were the son of Ham and Ham the son of Shem. The Chronicler, as always, expects readers to know their biblical history and it becomes more obvious in what follows that Shem, Ham and Japheth are brothers whose father was Noah. Typical of the Septuagint, this ancient Greek translation makes the text clearer by adding after Noah, 'sons of Noah,' before mentioning the three sons.

Noah's family of eight, which included his three sons and their wives, are the only ones who escaped the universal Flood. Though the event is not mentioned, the Chronicler wishes his readers to pause and remember that catastrophe, for the text does not immediately continue with the elect line of descent through Shem. The main trunk of the tree is abandoned for a moment in order to introduce some of the chief branches. Here again, a universal note is detected in the Chronicler's arrangement of his material. Israel and all the other nations of the world are descended not only from Adam, but from Noah's three sons. It is not an exhaustive list but a symbolic round figure of seventy names and it represents the entire world of nations and people groups. It reads like a verbal 'map of the world'.<sup>4</sup> One commentator notes that the only material the Chronicler omits from Genesis at this point is the genealogy of Cain (Gen. 4:17-24) and suggests that this is because the Flood 'meant a completely fresh start in the spread of mankind'.<sup>5</sup>

Descendants of all three of Noah's sons are named and they call to mind the nations of the world that spread out over the earth after the tower of Babel incident (Gen. 10:1-11:9). As
