

Your local paper has published an article with the title 'Young people today are too sensitive. They need to grow a backbone.'

Write a letter to the newspaper giving your views.

In your letter you could discuss:

- problems young people are facing today
- opinions of young people held by other generations
- ways in which attitudes to 'sensitivity', expressing emotions, and/or mental health have changed as well as any other ideas you might have.

*Your response will be marked for the accurate and appropriate use of vocabulary, spelling, punctuation and grammar.

(Total for Question 9 = 40 marks)

Answer:

Dear Mr Smith,

Yesterday an article was published in your newspaper accusing young people of being too sensitive. As a young person myself, I'd like to challenge some of this patronising and old-fashioned rhetoric, and offer a contrasting perspective. At the risk of fitting into your 'sensitive' stereotype: to make crass, oversimplified generalisations like this about large groups of people is a really harmful and misguided practice (and bad journalism).

In your article the writer (who was born in the 60s) claimed that young people were anxious and depressed about everything, and didn't have fun like previous generations. Well, there are some important differences which face Gen Z today. Firstly, they are born into a world facing the extreme likelihood of mass extinction due to climate change. Secondly, they are economically in a far more precarious position than prior generations. Most young people will struggle to buy a house before the age of 40, unlike the boomers who owned property in their early 20s. They are still paying off university debts, often of over £50000. All this instability leads to some understandable concern, and it shows a staggering lack of critical thinking from the writer of the article not to factor this into his discussion.

I know that stereotypes exist of millennial and Gen Z young people which claim they are indecisive, can't face hard work, or get outraged over the tiniest thing. To that I would say: the idea that young people don't work hard is simply misguided. Most young people I know are managing creative projects on the weekends because the creative industries have been decimated by 15 years of Conservative government. They're dynamic, and understand that skills are transferable – why not build up a portfolio career? And they're aware of the power of language, and keen to look out for those who may not have a voice as recognised by the powerful in society.

What's wrong with being sensitive? Endless psychologists have shown that talking about your feelings is healthy, meaningful and productive. Sharing vulnerability is humanizing and helps us connect with others. I'm proud to feel unhappy when social justice is threatened – that same sensitivity allows me to feel joy when things go right. A better understanding of mental health problems and a lack of stigmatization allows people to ask for help when they need it.

The writer of your article is quick to dismiss, make fun of and scorn young people for their supposed lack of backbone. Perhaps a scathing, ironic attitude is easier than an earnest, empathetic approach. Maybe he should try some sensitivity.

With best wishes,

Anonymous Snowflake
