

Global Issues – Pandemics

Introduction

A pandemic is a disease that has spread across a large region, several continents, or even worldwide. There have been many instances of pandemics throughout history involving diseases such as influenza, cholera, typhus, smallpox, measles, tuberculosis, and many more.

Terms – Endemic, Epidemic, and Pandemic

The amount of a particular disease that is typically present in a community is referred to as the endemic level of the disease. An endemic disease has a consistent rate of infections.

A disease becomes an epidemic when there is a rapid spread of the disease to a large number of people in a given population in a short period of time.

A pandemic is an epidemic that has spread over several countries or continents, usually affecting a large number of people.

A disease is not a pandemic just because it is widespread or kills many people; for a disease to be a pandemic it must also be infectious. For example, cancer is responsible for many deaths worldwide, but it is not a pandemic since it is not infectious or contagious.

How do Pandemics Begin?

The World Health Organization previously identified several stages in which a new influenza virus can become a pandemic. A virus may start by infecting animals. In some cases, the virus may move from animals to people. A virus may then move to a stage where it spreads from person to person. Small, localized clusters of the virus may appear. If the virus becomes well adapted to humans, larger clusters may appear. Finally, a virus can lead to a pandemic when there is increased and sustained transmission in the general population.

Significant Historic Pandemics

The Black Death, AD 1346-1353– One of the best-known and most devastating pandemics in history was the Black Death, which killed an estimated 75-200 million people. It was caused by a strain of bacterium that was spread by fleas on infected rodents.

European Arrival in the New World– It is estimated that up to 95% of the Native American population in the New World was caused by diseases including smallpox, measles, and influenza. The Europeans had developed high degrees of immunity to these diseases over centuries, while Native Americans had no such immunity.

The Influenza Pandemic of 1918– Often called the "Spanish Flu," the disease likely did not start in Spain. From 1918-1920, the influenza pandemic infected 500 million people around the world and resulted in the deaths of an estimated 50 to 100 million. Mass troop movements during World War One caused the disease to spread more quickly.
