1. The metabolic rate of a 40 g mouse is 6 kcal/day. If the metabolic rate of an elephant is 2400W, estimate the mass of the elephant according to Kleiber's law.

Data:

$$M_m = 40 \text{ g} = 0.04 \text{ kg}$$

$$R_m = 6 \text{ kcal/day} = 0.29 \text{ W}$$

$$R_e = 2400 \text{ W}$$

$$1 \text{ cal} = 4.18 \text{ J}$$

Mass of the elephant? M_e

According to Kleiber's law:

$$R \propto M^{(3/4)}$$

Therefore:

$$\frac{R_e}{R_m} = \left(\frac{M_e}{M_m} \right)^{3/4} \quad \text{solving this equation for the mass of the elephant and with the data above we have:}$$

Solution: $M_e = 6696 \text{ kg}$

Renardy, 1992-12-18 Two fluid dynamics is a challenging subject rich in physics and practical applications Many of the most interesting problems are tied to the loss of stability which is realized in preferential positioning and shaping of the interface so that interfacial stability is a major player in this drama Typically solutions of equations governing the dynamics of two fluids are not uniquely determined by the boundary data and different configurations of flow are compatible with the same data This is one reason why stability studies are important we need to know which of the possible solutions are stable to predict what might be observed When we started our studies in the early 1980 s it was not at all evident that stability theory could actually work in the hostile environment of pervasive nonuniqueness We were pleasantly surprised even astounded by the extent to which it does work There are many simple solutions called basic flows which are never stable but we may always compute growth rates and determine the wavelength and frequency of the unstable mode which grows the fastest This procedure appears to work well even in deeply nonlinear regimes where linear theory is not strictly valid just as Lord Rayleigh showed long ago in his calculation of the size of drops resulting from capillary induced pinch off of an inviscid jet
